〇 Course Objectives

This course aims to provide a fundamental introduction into conceptual and theoretical frameworks for understanding contemporary international organizations (hereinafter: IO). On this bases, it finally provides significant insights into IO's contemporary roles in global politics. On completion of this course, students will gain familiarity with IO's functions as a law-politics-interface and acquire analytical skills for considering political contestation in and/or around IOs.

〇 Course Summary

This course is divided into three parts: (1) conceptual frameworks of international organizations; (2) theories of International Relations for understanding international organizations; (3) a concept of the Third United Nations.

〇 Teaching and Learning Methods

(1) The course language is Japanese and/or English. This depends on participating students.

(2) The course will be comprised of a mixture of mini-lectures and student presentations.

(3) A week by week reading list will be offered. Students are required to read it in advance.

〇 Class Schedule
