○授業の到達目標及びテーマ

The main purpose of this course is to equip students with basic analytical tools in Economic which would allow them to analyze a broad range of economic issues in reality. The first half of the course would focus on basic theories in Microeconomics and the second half would focus on the theories in Macroeconomics.

○授業の概要

This course aims to provide an overview of basic theoretical frameworks in Economics. The first half of the course will cover important theories in Microeconomic including supply and demand, price elasticity, and behaviors of consumer and producer. The second half of the course will discuss both short-run and long-run macroeconomic analytical frameworks, i.e., the IS-LM model and Solow growth model. Please note that the course contents might be adjusted depending on the progress during the term.

○授業の方法

This course will be offered in Japanese in spring semester and in English in Fall semester. Students are expected to complete reading assignments before they come to the class, and complete all course work in English. The course will integrate lecturing and interactive approaches to conduct classes. Students are expected to actively participate in discussions and undertake proactive research.
